Description:

This year's middle/high school art class, entitled "Foundations of Color Theory" is a great class for students who art interested in art and just want to make some cool projects, or for students who are interested in pursuing art seriously in college or as a career. The class will primarily focus on developing skills with color using oil pastels, chalk pastels, colored pencils, and paint. Subject matter will include still lifes, photographs, self-portraits, and nature. Students will develop a strong understanding of color theory by the end of the class which will serve as an excellent foundation for higher art studies. For those students interested in art college, the artwork done in this class will be a great addition to a college-entrance portfolio. There is no pre-requisite and students of all levels are encouraged to enroll. However, students who have taken "Foundations of Drawing" will find that many of the skills developed in that class will apply to this class. Students will be graded on the completion of in-class and out-of-class assignments, overall effort as evidenced by their personal sketchbook and class attitude, and how well they apply technical skills that are taught in class.
