Description:

This class will help middle schoolers develop study skills that are appropriate for their academic development. Specifically, I will try to dovetail the topics covered with the tasks and skills required for the History, Science and Literature courses offered at the middle school level. For example, students will learn to read source material, using graphic organizers to help them draw conclusions. Then they will work in groups to practice writing their conclusions. This will help with current events reports in science and character reports in history. We will also tackle how to proofread. Other topics will include time management, sleep, cell phones, notebook organization, learning styles, and fixed v. growth mindset. There will be minimal homework, as the goal is to help students acquire skills to help them be more effective in their homework for other classes.
